

University of Washington
Seattle, Washington

Department/Division: School of Public Health, Nutritional Sciences Program

Degrees/Programs Offered: MPH in Public Health Nutrition
MS and PhD in Nutritional Sciences
Graduate Coordinated Program in Dietetics

About the Program: The MPH in Public Health Nutrition program is intended to provide: a) a broad overview of the public health system and the environment in which public health nutrition recommendations are interpreted and implemented; b) basic analytical and administrative skills necessary to integrate nutrition into the public health core functions of assessment, policy development and assurance; and c) an opportunity for advanced study of a particular topic in public health nutrition related to a student's special interests and career goals. Graduates of the program would be expected to participate in policy analysis, program development, and to design and manage population-based community wide interventions as part of a large-scale public health program.

For More Information: <http://depts.washington.edu/nutr/>