

Harvard University School of Public Health
Boston, MA

Academic Unit: Department of Nutrition

Degrees Offered: SD in Nutrition with a concentration in Public Health Nutrition

Dietetic Internship Program: No

About the Program: The concentration in public health nutrition, leading to the SD degree, provides rigorous training in nutrition and health behavior principles and their application in real world settings. Complementing a dual focus on nutrition and health behavior, students will receive rigorous training in quantitative and qualitative methods, program development and evaluation, nutrition policy, and disparities in nutrition-related behaviors and outcomes. The research interests of faculty in this concentration include: family-centered interventions; program evaluation; genetic epidemiology; food policy issues; cardiovascular disease; prevention of childhood obesity; health communication; eating disorders; and school-based health interventions. Applicants must have a strong background in nutrition, behavioral science, and/or public health. A graduate degree is desirable but not required.

For more information:

<http://www.hsph.harvard.edu/nutrition/prospective-students/public-health-nutrition/>